INTRODUCTION

This open file contains a database compiled from all available geochemical analyses up to June 1991 in the Lake George area (part of NTS 21 G/14) (Figure 1). Anomalous areas of stream and spring sediment analyses (Plates 91-36, 91-36A to H, and 91-36J) were delineated utilizing this information. The project was initiated to assist in delineating the mineral potential of the area and to develop a method of presenting the data. It is anticipated that this open file report and accompanying maps will be the first in a series of similar compilation projects in southern New Brunswick.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This geochemical compilation was initiated by Malcolm McLeod, who provided thoughtful guidance throughout the project. The authors would like to thank Dr. Arie Ruitenberg and Rao Irrinki for their suggestions and discussions regarding the compilation procedures. Freda Kelly assisted with data entry to the geochemical database. Shasta Abbott edited the report, database, and map plates.

METHODS

All known geochemical data in government publications and in non-confidential assessment files (up to June 1991) from the Mineral Resources Division were utilized to compile the database. Stream, spring, lake-drilled wells, bog and till sample sites were plotted on 1:10 000 New Brunswick grid maps. UTM coordinates for these sites were determined manually. Soil sample sites were digitized from mineral exploration company assessment file maps into the CARIS (Computer-Aided Resource Information System) GIS (Geographic Information System). The UTM coordinates were generated from these digitized locations.

The distribution of sample sites and soil sample grids was plotted on Plate 91-36A. Outlines of anomalous areas (Plates 91-36B to H, and 91-36J) were determined by using contouring programs on the GIS.

Analyses and related information (Appendix I) are available in dBASE format from the Mineral Resources Division. Files containing the information on the accompanying plates will be available in a variety of digital forms from the Mineral Resources Division.
